Tech Tip Of The Month - Computer virus symptoms

After you open and run an infected program or attachment on your computer, you might not realize that you've introduced a virus until you notice something isn't quite right. Here are a few primary indicators that your computer might be infected:

- Your computer runs more slowly than normal
• Your computer stops responding or locks up often
• Your computer crashes and restarts every few minutes
• Your computer restarts on its own and then fails to run

- normally
• Applications on your computer don't work correctly
• Disks or disk drives are inaccessible
• You can't print correctly
• You see unusual error messages
• You see distorted menus and dialog boxes

These are common signs of infection—but they might also indicate hardware or software problems that have nothing to do with a virus. Microsoft has a Malicious Software Removal Tool that you can run to check for Viruses. Make sure that you have up-to-date antivirus software installed on your computer. If you need help checking for viruses on your computer, please contact us at 909-287-7900 and we can take care of it for you.

Tip: Beware of messages warning you that you sent e-mail that contained a virus. This can indicate that the virus has listed your e-mail address as the sender of tainted e-mail. This does not necessarily mean you have a virus. Some viruses have the ability to forge e-mail addresses.

Can You Power Your Home With a Kite?

To effectively gather electricity from wind power, you need a strong breeze going. Along those lines, a company called KiteGen Research figures that wind currents only get strong the higher you go — so why not just go up to 2,600 feet?

It kind of comes off as an idea you'd see in a Pixar movie — or even straight out of a child's mind — but KiteGen has been using 200-foot-square kites hovering at 2,600 feet in the air to generate electricity, according to Popular Science: "As the kite's tether unspools, it spins an alternator that generates up to 40 kilowatts. Once the kite reaches its peak altitude, it collapses, and motors quickly reel it back in to re-start the cycle."

KiteGen has plans to expand its scope and test a 1,500-square-foot kite by 2011, which — if all goes well — the company hopes could generate enough to keep 9,000 homes powered.

New Mimo Mini USB Monitor

A single USB connection from your computer gets you an instant high-resolution secondary display. This awesome display is perfect for your IM client, widgets, PC gaming tools, your email, a spreadsheet, your PhotoShop tools, or even video!

The Mimo mini USB monitor provides an extra 800 x 480 pixels, which is a significant addition to the screen of any netbook, and it runs purely off of USB: no batteries or power cords and there's a video card inside. It can be used in either horizontal or vertical orientation. At 1.3 pounds, it's light enough to carry around with your netbook. The price you pay for the convenience and portability of this portable mini-monitor is $130.

Wearable ROCK!

The Electronic Guitar Shirt is not a toy that plays pre-canned musical riffs, it is a real musical instrument that allows you to play your favorite songs. All major chords are recorded from a real electric guitar, and the included magnetic pick allows you to strum just like you would a real guitar. The included mini amp clips to your belt and gets plenty loud with great sounding amplification circuitry.
